

From the personal stories shared by the leaders in Kigali, Rwanda, four key themes can be identified for further discussion:

- 1. Governance and Church Relations: This theme explores the role and influence of government on the church, focussing on control, freedom, and the impact of governance on religious institutions during crises. It includes challenges related to poverty, development, funding opportunities, and accessibility to resources for the church and community.
- 2. Psychosocial and Emotional Well-being: This theme highlights the emotional and psychological challenges faced during crises, such as loneliness, family separation, psychological pain, emotional distress, and the lack of support networks. It also covers personal healing, restoration, and the impact of unresolved emotional pain on individuals' ability to recover.
- 3. Health and Social Welfare Systems: This theme examines issues related to health, including access to medical support, the strength of health systems, and the role of long-term solutions for public health crises. It also touches on how poverty, laziness, and the lack of health resources influence individual and community resilience.
- 4. Economic and Employment Challenges: This theme focusses on joblessness, economic independence, and the struggle for financial stability during crises. It includes the barriers people face in securing economic opportunities, understanding funding processes, and achieving long-term economic growth. The theme also links to how mindset, confidence, and preparedness affect economic recovery efforts.

These themes provide a comprehensive framework for exploring the multifaceted nature of crises and recovery in Kigali.
